Fun Facts: Did you know the dahlia is the national flower of Mexico? Dahlias originated in Central America and are native from Mexico to Costa Rica. Plants and seeds were taken to Europe by Spanish adventurers more than 200 years ago. At the Botanical Gardens in Madrid, the Abbe Cavanille named the genus "Dahlia" for Andreas Dahl, a noted Swedish botanist and student of Carl Linnaeus. There are currently 35 recognized species. Because the dahlia is a natural hybrid, developing new varieties from the original simple blooms to a vast range of blossoms in saturated bright colors has been possible.
